Realists are Global Citizens

Although, like everyone else, Realists are born into nation states, Realists see themselves as citizens of this planet. We are members of a common species and we are all interconnected through the {ln:Tree of Knowledge} and are dedicated to the advancement of the human race through the {ln:Principle of Positive Evolution}. Realists see nation states as temporary subcultures, as artificial man-made divisions that exist for a time, evolve, and eventually disappear. Our loyalties and our religious commitments are to the advancement of humanity and that commitment supercedes any commitments to nation states.